I agree that the heritage Centre is a good proposal as George Street Car Park is almost opposite. I assume that you will have checked with the Heritage Centre?

I think there is probably more parking at the British Legion than at the Church Institute plus, Tesco's carpark is just around the corner. Additionally, there will be building works happening on the old Bingo Hall site and, eventually there will be extra houses there which may cause additional parking problems. There used to be a much larger carpark, but when the Bingo Hall was sold The Church Institute negotiated to buy a piece of land to use as their car park so, it is now much smaller. Also, The Church Institute car park is gravel and this is very difficult for some elderly people to walk on and probably impossible if you're in a wheelchair. I believe that the British Legion is a better option than the Church Institute. I cannot think of anywhere else that could be used.
